Instructions for Adam

In the middle of the work you notice that the effective position of the pit and of the adjacent construction basement do not correctly correspond to the technical drawing you saw, in which the position of the largest gas pipe was specified.

First, you talk with the foreman, but he answers that you have to proceed with the job.

You try then to talk with Danny, but he's in a hurry and he's leaving.

You try with Alex, but he doesn't know how to answer to your doubt.

Then you proceed working.

After a minute you notice that you're hitting something tough and you hear a sudden high-pressure gas discharge: clearly you broke the largest gas main!

Instructions for Tom

It's a difficult day, the developer is around the site, he watches everything quietly and is paying attention

Everybody stops to ask your opinion about meaningless things and you're impatient with their lack of self-sufficiency

You're afraid that this time a delay will accumulate: and you can't afford that...

When Adam asks you about doubts that he has you tell him to keep working, as experience taught you that technical drawings never correspond exactly....

Instructions for Danny

You're in a hurry because you have problems at home and you have to come back early, and the administration office called you for an urgent matter.

Last night you didn't sleep much and you have a headache.

When Adam comes looking for you, you remember that you suspected that there was something wrong on the technical drawing, but then an angry passerby approaches, the phone starts ringing... You think that Tom reported the problem to someone else anyway ...and you run to your appointment with the administration office while talking on the phone.

Instructions for Alex

You started working recently and you want to make a good impression.

You like the work, but you feel inexperienced and you feel a sense of awe towards your colleagues and, in particular, towards the foreman

When Adam comes to talk with you, you think that he might be right, but if the foreman answered to keep working you feel you have to do so.

Instructions for the developer

You had an argument with the construction company and you thought to pay a visit to the construction site.

You have experience in the sector, and you want to get an idea about the way they're working.

You took a morning off in order to stay at the construction site and to ask some questions to workers.

Instructions for the passerby

You live on Montgomery street and your pedestrian crossing is partially obstructed by the materials from the construction site since yesterday.

You're impatient because this is not the first time it has happened.

You approach and start asking in a loud way when they think they will free up the crossing
